Ed Cross is delighted to present Jápa, a solo exhibition by Professor Jerry Buhari. This series is a meditation on migration and endurance, set against the backdrop of Buhari's reflections on his personal history, the future of his family, and a national zeitgeist of movement in post-colonial Nigeria.

Jápa, derived from the Yorùbá word meaning "to flee" or "to escape," has evolved into a widely used slang term in Nigeria, especially among younger generations. Jápa signifies the desire of Nigerians to leave behind oppressive conditions in search of "greener pastures" through new opportunities abroad. Buhari reflects on this phenomenon not as a passing moment, but as part of a larger history of dislocation and search for freedom. Through the Jápa series, Buhari interrogates migration as a markedly political yet deeply complex emotional and physical phenomenon. For Buhari, his paintings are "multi-layered texts...in one sense, the journals of a migrant", writes Ayò Akínwándé in the essay that accompanies the exhibition.

In the main gallery space hangs ten textile works which extend Buhari's exploration of migration into the realm of symbolism and cartography. These pieces feature clusters of circular scrap fabrics in brown, blue, and green, representing fleeing Africans, the precarious Mediterranean Sea and Europe/North America, respectively. The textile works, created through a meticulous process of dyeing, stitching, and layering, evoke, as Ayò Akínwándé writes, "a symbolic journey through layered geographies".

In the two large-scale textile works: Jápa as explorers (2025) and We are all Jápa (2025), Buhari reimagines the migrant as an explorer, a navigator who experiences jápa not just as a rupture but a process of redefinition, embarking on a journey filled with uncertainty and hope. In addition to the textile series are fourteen miniature works on paper. These pieces - grouped into the sub-series Personal landscape I–VI (2024), In the valley of decision I–III (2024), and Migrant's dream of green lands I–V (2024) - reflect an intimate approach to the theme of Jápa, capturing Buhari's own internal struggles with his children's potential flight from Nigeria as part of his meditations on migration. These small scale works invite close viewing, where the audience is encouraged to ask: "What does it mean to move - voluntarily or otherwise".

Jápa is a contemporary meditation on experiences that have long been part of the human condition. Buhari constructs a visual lexicon of departure: fractured space and motifs of dislocation. The sense of motion throughout the works is tense and ambivalent. The artist encourages the viewer to consider the narrative elements of Jápa and in doing so, reveals the sinuous stories of migration in the West African context, where both the artist and his subjects navigate the complex inner landscapes of disillusionment and new horizons.
