MOCHIZUKI MASAO

In 1975, Mochizuki Masao stopped watching television, and began using his camera to observe and document the programmes broadcast daily to hundreds of thousands of Japanese homes. This self-conscious interruption of the transmission from screen to audience, in which Mochizuki mediated the television's stream of images through his camera, articulates an early encounter with mass media which has become integral to our collective experience of the last half century.
